Pepsi not associated with animal rights groups

The following letter was sent in response to inquiries regarding rumors that Pepsi Cola Bottling Company and their alleged contributions to animal rights lobbying or anti-rodeo Organizations.

John Van Norman

Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Great Falls

1212 15th street North

Great Falls, Mont. 59403

Dear Mr. Van Norman;

I share your concern about recent rumors that Pepsi-Cola allegedly contributed funds to anti-rodeo organizations. This simply is not true. In fact, neither Pepsi nor PepsiCo nor any other division in our corporation supports these organizations.

It's difficult to understand why anyone would deliberately spread rumors about Pepsi Cola making substantial contributions to these special interest groups - never have we been involved in this issue.

In addition, please know that I've discussed this issue with Mr. T. J. Walters, Director of the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association. He, too, understands that these rumors are not valid

Thanks to Larry Wirtz

Dear Larry Wirtz and Northern Rodeo Co.;

I would really like to thank you for the $600 Bonus that you awarded to me in the bareback riding last fall. It really made my summer.

Check GVW, health requirements on hauling horses across state lines

Remember Rodeo Contestants: As of April 1, many state laws have been changed. When entering another state and pulling horses, you must stop at the port of entry. (Idaho fine is $82.50 for failing to stop).

Annual equine import permits are required when you leave Montana with your horse and plan to return.

Some states require health certificates on livestock issued in the last 30 days; No Coggins required for Idaho, however, Wyoming does require that testing.

Also know that commercial driver's license are required if you're pulling over 18,000 gvw in Montana or 10,000 in Idaho. (A crewcab pickup with camper pulling four-horse trailer loaded is about 18,000 gvw.)

If you have questions about livestock permits, call the Montana Department of Livestock in Helena, 444-2976. Questions about commercial drivers license call the Department of Highways, GVW department, in Helena, 444-6131.

Animals-rights group protests not new to rodeo

By CARL RIECKMANN

(Reprinted by premission from Agri-News)
Not even the closed-door, public-banned steer-roping contests were satisfactory to the animal-rightists.

They wanted and got court arrest summons against promoters and cowboys in a rodeo at a British exhibition in London.

And with further pressure and support from Britain's home secretary in the House of Commons, even the private steer-roping sessions were shut down before the rodeo ran its course.

A current bill in the U.S. Congress that would cover exhibition animals under the Animal Welfare Act and threaten activities of rodeos, zoos, circuses and horse races reminds that animal-rightists have been at it for a long time.

Even if the measure by Rep. Peter Kostmayer, D-Pa., is not given high likelihood of passage, it is reminiscent of how long the folks with the animal agenda have tried to change accepted practices for treatment and use of animals not only in normal commercial channels but in public exhibitions.

The five court summons in London were against Tex Austin and his American entourage putting on the rodeo at the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley Stadium. They were charged with cruelty to animals in the steer-roping contest.

One of the summonses was returnable against a cowboy involved in a roping incident in which a steer broke its leg.

Agents of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals urged a British magistrate to try the case immediately so the rodeo might be stopped but a hearing date was set for three days before the contest was to end.

The society's agents later said they were satisfied since they mainly were concerned with preventing the rodeo from becoming an annual event in England.

The day of the summonses, cowgirl Anita Studernick was thrown from a bronco and broke her collarbone, and one steer was shot after its horn was torn off in the meshed fencing around the area.

And then promoters closed off the contested roping competition from the public, continuing them behind locked doors with only London policemen as spectators.

"About 100,000 persons saw the other rodeo events yesterday and cheered the skill and daring of the cowboys and cowgirls," reported the New York Times. "The crowds ejected one spectator who booed last night's performance."

But three days later, after a House of Commons speech by Britain's home secretary, exhibition officials said no further steer roping would take place. Even rodeo promoters already had decided to suspend the contests pending the hearing on their summonses.

Then came rumors that the arrests would affect the annual Calgary Stampede just getting underway.

The event was under the patronage of Britain's Prince of Wales, who owned a ranch in Alberta, and its previous-year winner of the prince's prized bucking-horse-competition trophy was in London riding with the American cowboys picking up the arrest summons.

According to one Times feature: "Information just received in New York discloses that partly because of the objection in London to certain features of the rodeo there, nothing that might be considered as brutal will be permitted this year at Calgary."

Yet, during the stampede or in the days immediately following, the Times was silent on whether the London problems effected any changes at Calgary that year. Steer roping is still a part of the stampede's annual agenda.

And back in London, once the exhibition had ended, court summonses against Austin and the others simply were dismissed.

About one inch under the Times story disclosing their disposition was a Chicago & North Western Railway ad offering a pamphlet listing "Wyoming Wild West Ranches" and suggesting:

"For those who enjoy horseback riding, mountain climbing, fishing for trout in mountain lakes and streams, hunting and the rugged life of the Big Out of Doors, nothing beats a vacation spent of a Wild West Ranch."

Incidentally, that all happened in 1924.

Carpenter family will continue RMR productions

The loss of John A. Carpenter stunned all of us in NRA rodeo. A constant influence in the association's rodeos, especially those in the northwest corner of Montana, John's presence will be missed this summer of '92.

However, the Carpenter family is determined to carry on the quality rodeos Rocky Mountain Rodeo Company has sanctioned with NRA.

Rocky Mountain Rodeo (RMR) was formed in 1982 when the Carpenters - John, wife Jill, and children, Richard, Bo, Kenny and Jeanne - bought out Bob Schall, Sr.'s rodeo stock.

John, the backbone of the rodeo company, said the reason for forming a rodeo company was to keep his kids together and allow them to rodeo.

"They are the ones who own it," he often said.

The Carpenters started putting on winter series rodeos in the winter of 1982-1983.

The winter rodeos were the only series of its kind in the state. These rodeos were designed to help novice cowboys gain experience and the veterans could stay in shape throughout the winter and come into the summer season with a competitive edge.

Many changes have taken place during the past 10 years of winter rodeos at the Carpenter Arena in Kalispell.

In 1986, RMR sold their stock and established contracts to a new contractor, Powder River Rodeo Company - Hank Franzen and Steve Morris.

Within one year however, RMR was back in production putting on another winter series, drawing up new contracts and buying new stock.

In the beginning, Richard, Bo, Kenny and Jeanne competed in these winter rodeos.

Today, the offspring have shifted priorities and are involved in the production of the RMR rodeos. Each of them have money and time invested in the family-owned corporation.

Jill will continue as the mainstay of the family corporation. She'll continue to secretary the RMR rodeos and sign the checks for winning cowboys.

Richard, the oldest, still ropes in NRA and PRCA rodeos throughout the region. However, if stock is contracted by RMR, you'll find Richard a helping hand. He gathers and ships stock. At the rodeos, the oldest son can be found flanking stock, picking up, loading chutes, helping run the rodeo.

Bo is instrumental in overall rodeo production from start to finish. He drives truck, gathers, sorts, flanks. He's the main stay of the group and even before John's death, Bo was making major decisions. When John was unavailable, Bo was next in line to answer the questions about the rodeo company.

Jeanne spends much time publishing the Cowboy Digest. However, she the Friday girl on the rodeo trail. She does bookkeeping, time keeping and score tallying. She'll even grab a mike and fill in as rodeo announcer when and where needed.

Kenny, now of Kaycee, Wyo., works as Harry Vold's pickupman. He, too, contributes to the family business by selling the outstanding bucking stock to professional contractors.

RMR has sold top stock. Bareback horse, "Hermie's Worm" was NRA bareback horse of the year twice, and has been to the NFR since Harry Vold purchased the horse.

The Carpenters feel they are unique in the stock contracting business because they occasionally sell off some of their top stock to allow them to buck to their fullest potential. They try to build and improve their operation by starting young horses keeping their rodeo company young and fresh.

The Carpenters work as a family to produce a professionally run rodeo that will entertain the crowd.

"The audience is 90 percent of the rodeo," John said.

"Without them we are nothing," he knew. "We try to please them the best we can. It's family entertainment."

It's family business, also. And the Carpenter family's involvement in NRA rodeo will continue in the Summer of 1992.

Surely John will nod with approval on his family who'll continue to entertain the rodeo audiences with a professionally-produced, family-run rodeos, in both summer and winter.
